The Paper Chase: Your Guide to Paper Decluttering

Looking at all of those bank statements, catalogs, and credit card offers can easily generate stress and steal your energy. But simply starting the decluttering process is often the hardest part. Although we live in a digital society, our homes continue to flood with paper – it doesn't have to overwhelm you, just tackle one stack at a time. You may want to try this three-container strategy:

The Largest Container: Recycling Bin or Trash Can Much of your paper can simply be tossed straight into the recycling or trash bin, so grab a big one.

Midsized Container: For Paper with Personally Identifiable Information These are the pages with your name and address, account or phone number that you may want to shred. Separate these parts from the many pages of printed material and mailed correspondence that can be trashed without shredding.

Smallest Container: For Paper You Choose to Save for Filing You may imagine that you'll need to file quite a bit, but be prepared to be pleasantly surprised! Once you have compiled a stack, look through them again because most people find they can discard even more when they give these papers a second pass.

You may find it helpful to focus on one reasonably sized pile at a time and adopting the motto: STAY CALM and KEEP ON
